(From "The Evening World.") Special Correspondent with the Team.
DANVILLE, Va., March 25.—It begins to look as though the Giants were about to run up against a string of hard luck on their trip home. When they arrived here yesterday morning it was raining, but late in the day it cleared off and gave promise of nice weather for today.

When the boys awoke this morning they found old Jupiter Pluvius at his tricks. It rained with little hope of its putting away his sprinkling-can. So it is doubtful if the game can be played today. The Giants have had a string of bad luck lately. They have lost three games in a row.

(Special to The Evening World.)

"The action of the managers in deciding not to play Pennsylvania any more has been a mistake. There is a sentiment in favor of playing Pennsylvania. The recent action of the Harvard faculty has had the effect of strengthening this sentiment, and I think the Faculty of Princeton will take favorable notice of the petition that will be presented to them."
